A unique play came up in the Tennallytown-Spartan game of July 1, in the Olympia League. With three men on bases and three and two on the batter, the Spartan pitcher threw a curve ball that fooled O'Day, who jumped over the plate, and as a result was hit by the ball, shout, as the tying run would be forced in if the batter was allowed his base. Umpire Ray ruled that the batter could not take his base, as he had jumped in ball, as it would have been a strike if for the Station boys. Score: the batter had not been hit. Therefore he called it a "dead ball" and made the batter stay at the plate. Tennallytown protested the game, but nothing has come of it thus far.
